

Mr Chilly Saves Christmas

Father Christmas was just setting off when Rudolf's nose went out. He had a cold, but Father Christmas hadn't noticed. They became very lost. Luckily Father Christmas had landed near a snowman which a child had made earlier.

Father Christmas thought that the snowman might be helpful, so he muttered into his beard and suddenly the snowman, called Mr Chilly, was alive. "Good day Father Christmas", said Mr Chilly, "are you lost?" he said after a moment. "Yes!" said Father Christmas. "Well I can help sir", said Mr Chilly, "I have night vision eyes." "Really!" exclaimed Father Christmas, "Oh yes." said Mr Chilly. "Shall we get to work then?" said Father Christmas. So they set to work, Mr Chilly showed Father Christmas the way, while they both sorted which presents were for which people, and of course Father Christmas delivered them.

Then they discovered that they had finished! “I would like to thank you for helping me Mr Chilly”, said Father Christmas. “Thank you” said Mr Chilly. And as quick as it happened Mr Chilly was back as a snowman. So just in case Father Christmas ever needs help again, make sure you build your snowmen properly.

By Helena Peters (Aged 8)